It is a splendid idea to use hand-written letters and original newsletters to communicate with those elderly people. With more human ties brought by the students, they must have felt more secure about their own lives. Furthermore, they may be more interested in, and therefore more open to, what is going on in the society or among a certain age group. This, I think, is good for their mental health. If I were a member of a volunteer group of university students, I would like to help a group of school-age children who came from outside Japan. I and my group members would set up weekly meetings with the children so that we can offer private tutoring and assistance to them in a comfortable atmosphere. It is not an easy thing to do to learn a new language, study school subjects in the new language, and adjust to a new society. I hope we will be helpful enough for the children to make their new lives easier and happier. I would also like to enjoy learning about their home countries, which may lead to a more reciprocal and comfortable relationship. (203 words) |
